FOREWORD.

The greater part of the matter contained in this volume was collected by Daniel Gould Allen [No. 343] from bible and other records, and by personal interviews with the older members of the family. It was published in 1898, three years after the death of the compiler, under the title "Genealogy of the Allen Family" or "History of Quiddnessett". Had Mr. Allen lived to have properly prepared his manuscript for the press he would undoubtedly have discovered and corrected many of the errors and discrepancies which manifested themselves after it was printed.

As the edition was very small, it was thought best to publish a revised edition, adding an index and as much new data as possible.

This volume contains, therefore, all the matter of any importance contained in the first edition, with as many corrections and additions as could be gathered. All dates, so far as possible, have been verified or corrected by a close search of the Vital Records of Rhode Island and other works, as well as by correspondence.

Any one finding errors is requested to send correct data which will be entered in a copy and deposited in the NEWBERRY LIBRARY, Chicago, to insure preservation and, at the same time, be available to anyone who might desire to consult it.

To Trace Your Ancestry.

After locating your parents by the index, you will find his, or her ~~their~~, individual number just above the name; then look for the same number further forward under the word, Children. This will give the name and family of your grandparent, and so on. Illustration: Christopher Harris Arnold⁸ is the head of family #518. on page ; the superior figure⁸ indicates that he is in the eighth generation from William¹, the emigrant. The names in parenthesis give the line of descent, viz., his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, etc. Turning forward to page , we find that #518 is one of the children of Phebe Waterman Allen⁷ [No. 339] who married Nathan Allen Arnold. Turn forward again and No. 339 will be found on page , as one of the children of Thomas Gould Allen⁶ [No. 191]. Continue in this way until the first generation is reached. Reverse this process to find the children, grandchildren, etc., of any given person. Those having the sign + will be found under his or her individual number in the following generation.

EXPLANATIONS.

In a number of instances authorities, or persons sending in data have given different dates of birth, death ^{or} and marriage, of the same person. In such cases preference has been given to the date which carried the best evidence of being correct. If given in full in the Vital Records of Rhode Island, such dates have been given preference. In ^{the} cases where there was no way to determine which was correct, both dates have been given.

Some of the Vital Records of Rhode Island, notably those of NORTH KINGSTOWN, have been badly damaged by fire and other causes, which accounts for the absence of a number of names or parts of names, as well as incomplete dates of birth, death and marriage.

Dr Daniel Gould Allen.

As the territory concerning which we write is an integral part of the Massachusetts country it may be well to preface the first chapter with a quotation from the Hon. F. R. Boston, published in 1885. From the Old Historical Society Collections, Vol III, page 1.

"The Massachusetts tribe occupied the whole of the present county of Washington, except the corner between the Passaic river and Takapung, the possession of which has since more than a frequent subject of contention between them and their western neighbors, the Pequots."

After the Pequots were vanquished in 1675, the Massachusetts claimed to what is now the Connecticut line and a long way into Kent County.

The territory of Quidnessett (in Indian parlance Assidnesset or Assidnesset), is situated in the northeastern part of the county. When the town was incorporated in 1674 it was called Kingstown and embraced the whole of the present county of Washington. In 1722 it was divided into two towns, North and South Kingstown, and at a later date the last named town was subdivided into Exeter, Richmond, Hopkinton, Westerly and Charlestown.

Formerly Quiddnessett was bounded on the north by the Potowomut river, extending from Greene's Forge as far north as the Maskachuge brook or Mascachowage river, thence following the Indian footpath or Peguet road, now called the Post road, to the Cocumquissic river, now called Stony Brook, near the house on the Updike farm, thence east a few rods on this brook and the Cocumscussuc Harbor, or Wickford Harbor; on the east by the Narragansett Bay.

After the line between Washington and Kent counties was established, its northern line followed up the Potowomut river to Hunt's bridge, thence westerly on the Post road.

The first purchase in the Narragansett country was made by Richard Smith in the year 1637. This tract of land comprises the Updike farm in the southwestern part of Quiddnessett. "He erected a house for trade and gave free entertainment to travelers, it being on the great road of the country." It was made of logs and stood where the Updike house now stands, and some of the timbers and bricks of that house are still in the one now standing. By the marriage of Smith's daughter into the Updike family this estate, given to her by the will of her father, took that name and so remained until it passed into the hands of Captain Joseph Congdon. Five or six years later Roger Williams and one Wilcox built houses near Smith. As Williams dated some of his letters at Cocumscussick it is evident that he spent some of his time at this place and probably preached to the Indians. The Narragansett tribe at this time numbered thirty thousand souls, including five thousand fighting men. It is safe to conclude that they were more numerous in Quidnessett, Cocumscussick and Namocock or Namocock (Boston Neck), than in any other place. We have never been able to find the exact location where Canonibus and Miantonomoh, or even the under Sachem Coquinaquand, resided. As the Indians were of a roving disposition they might have resided at one time in Narragansett and at another in Showomut (Warwick), or Aquidneck (Rhode Island). Some have fixed the place near Wickford. Roger Williams leased the land that he occupied, and in the year 1651 sold to Richard Smith his trading house, his two big guns and a small island for goats which had been lent him by the Sachems.

The Quidnessett territory was purchased of Sachem Coquinaquand, June 11, 1659, by Major Humphrey Atherton and his partners, twentythree years after Roger Williams had purchased Providence, and twentytwo years after Coddington and others had purchased of Canonibus and Miantonomoh, Aquidneck or Rhode Island. Newport was organized into a township in the year 1677.

Canonibus and Miantonomoh were the grand sachems of all the tribes in Rhode Island, and a part of Massachusetts. The Narragansett tribe was the most potent in New England, and all, or nearly all, the others were tributaries. Miantonomoh inherited the chieftainship from his father, but during his absence in war engagements, his uncle Canonicut was looked to as procurator. A more worthy, upright personage the dusky race never knew. He was nearly eighty years of age when Roger Williams first made his acquaintance and friendship. His judgment and crafty schemes were felt and respected far and near. The great Sachem of the Narragansetts died June 4, 1647, a very old man, nearly ninety years of age. He was until the end, a friend to Roger Williams and his associates, in the settlement of Rhode Island.

Miantonomoh was a famous young prince. He was a proud-spirited, turbulent chief, never at rest. Massachusetts and Connecticut both planned his capture, by the use of the Indians, through their chief, Uncas. The plan was successful. Miantonomoh was captured and taken to Hartford. Some months afterward the two colonies advised his death. According to the decision, Uncas carried Miantonomoh to the spot from where he had been taken, and on their arrival one of Uncas' men split Miantonomoh's head open from behind killing him instantly.

How soon after Major Atherton's purchase, the first lot of land was sold, I have not sufficient information at hand to show, but from a plat of the northern part of Quiddnessett in my possession, showing the farms, and the names of persons who purchased them, they must have been put into the market immediately after.

In the year 1686 most of the northern half was taken up by as many as twenty-five purchasers. Some of them were the wealthiest and most prominent men of Providence, Newport and Warwick. Among them were such men as Thomas Gould, Caleb Carr, Francis Binley, John Gould, Captain John Stanston, John Sanford, John Spruce and son, Valentine Whitman and Robert Westcote.

I have been unable to find the quantity of money that Major Atherton paid for Quiddnessett, but there is no doubt but that he made a good thing by his speculations.

The purchasers invested their money for the interest it would pay by the rise in the value of the land. They saw, even at that early day, that the land was valuable, that the locality was an inviting one, and the soil well adapted to raising corn, which was the staple product of the country. The raising of stock, horses and sheep, had no more inviting place, and Newport demanded all their products.

The deeds given to the purchasers were recorded at Newport as the records of Kingstown did not commence until the year 1694, some of the land was sold to the town and incorporated into the town.

Thomas Gould was the first owner of Gould's Mount farm. It was one of the farms for which the land was bought and sold in the year 1694.

In 1693 Thomas Sibley deeded to Daniel Gould, Sr. the share he had of Legge's Addition, which was a part of the tract of land purchased of the Indian sachem. The share consisted of one hundred and fifty acres, and the price paid was fifty pounds.

Thomas Hart, Francis Sibley and John Gould were the first purchasers of the lower Gould farm, being of the Potowomut river. There were five hundred acres in this farm and three hundred and twenty five acres in Gould's Mount farm. Thomas Gould bought it about 1691, and his nephew and namesake owned it for ninety years. It had passed through five generations when in the year 1830, Thomas Gould died and both farms were sold to Thomas Gould, Jr., of New York. John Sibley bought out Hart, Sibley and John Gould, and these two farms remained in the family for nearly two hundred years. Two hundred acres of the upper farm still remain in the Gould family.

As many of the original purchasers did not buy with the intention of making permanent settlements, by the year 1710 other settlers had bought them out. The Potowomut farm and the one belonging to the heirs of the late Caleb Allen, were first owned by Peter Fowler, Caleb Barr and John Sallas, these lots running north and south. Afterward George Hill and his sons, George and Henry, bought the south half of these lots, and the north half was purchased by one named Reynolds. For many years it was owned by the Quaker preacher, Thomas Anthony.

The farm owned by Joseph Thayer Hill was first purchased by one named Walker, and another whose name we have been unable to decipher, as early as the year 1700. It was also owned by a family named Reynolds, and Joseph Hill's great-grandfather, Thomas Hill, came from Dedham, Massachusetts and purchased it from Henry Reynolds about the year 1720.

The farms between the north and south roads in school district number 1, were first owned by John Greene and son. Edward Thurston of Newport owned a small three-cornered lot where Nathaniel S. Allen's house now stands.

John Sanford owned what has been called the Greene farm, opposite the residence of the late Deacon George Allen.

The Winteron farm was first owned by Valentine Winteron, and afterward by his son George, and grandson, George, who was in the war on Portsmouth and went out with the British. He was made a Lieutenant-Colonel in England, married the second time, and located another farm. The great-grandson, Holmes Winteron, inherited the Homestead farm, a part of which is still remembered in the family.

The descendants of Robert Allen, who settled at Allenton, purchased land in this part about the time that the Allens, Reynolds and Elders made their appearance here.

The citizens of Guilford have always been remarkable for their integrity and uprightness of character. William Reynolds and Joseph Swink were men of distinction.

The first schoolhouse built in North Kingston was in Guilford. It stood on the corner lot that now belongs to Nathan B. Waldron. It was built on a lot which was a part of the Wightman farm. Its site was a quarter of a mile south of the schoolhouse in district number 1, on the eastern side of the road. The oldest person now living cannot tell when it was removed. The axes were given and deeded to the town for school purposes. A schoolhouse was once in existence at the entrance to Judge Allen's farm. He probably built it for the benefit of his children, and it was afterward annexed to his house. In the year 1807, Thomas Allen, John Wightman and Thomas C. Allen built a schoolhouse where the district schoolhouse now stands. William Reynolds built one a little later, opposite the house of the late Elijah Terry. In 1820 it was moved and converted into a dwelling house.

In the year 1830, the school district, Number 1, built a large and commodious house just in the rear of where the old one used to stand. District Number 2 has a schoolhouse in the south part of parish No. 1. This territory and Boston Neck always claimed pre-eminence, not only in schoolhouses, but in the facilities of life. The Washington Asylum at Mickford gave a new impetus to educational progress. The influence has not here been lost, and the children of this section of the town, the parents, and the district to send their sons and daughters to school, have to receive a better education.

The English soldiers in Narragansett began some time before the Revolution. It was the custom for the soldiers to assemble at some notice in the neighborhood and listen to a minister of the gospel. While the British had possession of Narragansett Bay they would not sail and make the bay as though they intended to land, thereby frightening the church-going people. The guard would notify the people, who would run to their homes, equip themselves with forling pieces, and march to the seashore. Some carried their guns to meeting with them. Most of the people of those days were some kind of Baptists. There were some Quakers who went to meeting either in Greenwich or Mickford.

In the year 1806, Methodism was introduced into the neighborhood by Eliza Sweet. A class was formed with a membership of twelve or fifteen persons. The neighborhood has since 1817 furnished two ministers for this denomination.

The first was Elias Anthony, son of Joseph Anthony of North Providence, Rhode Island, who was born in the year 1771, and who is supposed to have been of German, Rhode Island, extraction within the limits of the first Greenwich meeting about 1806. He bought the farm at Pojock, in Quiddessett, and was a manufacturer of salt for army use, retiring from this business about the year 1840. He began his ministry here in 1817, and occasionally visited other meetings. His wife died in 1819, and in 1821 he married L. J. Stone of Swansea, Massachusetts, who died in 1847. Having become feeble and decrepit from age and infirmities, he sold his farm in 1846 and took up his residence at East Greenwich, Rhode Island, where he could attend meetings and receive medical aid. He was faithful in attending the Sabbath and week day meetings through all weather, and was often called upon to attend funerals. His sermons were full of love and good will to all people. He had four children by the first marriage and three by the second. Two of his daughters by the first marriage have been public speakers, viz., Lydia Macomber and Sarah Reynolds. The former lived in East Greenwich until her death, and the latter lives in Providence.

The second minister was the Rev. Joseph Martin Allen.

CONNECTICUT CLAIMS JURISDICTION.

After the Regent war, Connecticut claimed jurisdiction as for the Narragansett part, by the Court of King's Bench, in London, and John Greene of Philadelphia, were taken to England, confined, and confined there as war subjects. They applied to the Rhode Island Legislature for help, and were finally released. The strife between the two colonies continued until the winter of 1687, and the contest, on the part of the people of the Narragansett country here, was a long one, vacillating between Royalism and Rhode Island.

In Nov. 1671, the Assembly directed the Governor to call a court to be held at the place in the colony. The court: John Alcock, Deputy Governor, for the King's part; John Coggeshall, James Barker, William Chapman, Roger Williams, Lieutenant John Albro, Captain John Greene, Assistants; Richard Shailley, Sec.; Lieutenant Joseph Torrey, Serjeant Attorney; James Rogers, General Serjeant. The court assembled Nov 16th, a warrant having been issued to the inhabitants to appear at court at Tobias Saunders's house. His Majesty's Royal Charter was read, and the inhabitants were called to swear as to their fidelity to His Majesty and His colony. A large number appeared, and their loyalty was engaged to the colony. The court adjourned to Providence, May 18th, where after similar proceedings they adjourned to meet at Acquidneck (Quidnicket) Nov 19th, where they again adjourned to meet the following day. On the 20th they met at the proprietary house of Tobias said which stood on the Mount farm. The inhabitants being called to give their consent, were desirous of knowing whether the court, on behalf of the colony, had claim to the possessions which they then inhabited.

These persons were Samuel Dyer, Robert Spink, Lieutenant Robert Tredcott, John Greene, George Williner, Thomas Gould, Henry Tibbitts, Daniel Gould, James Reynolds, Daniel White, John Briggs, John Andrews and Thomas Waterman. A vote was passed that the court should lay no claim to their possessions. The persons engaged by the court were Thomas Gould, Samuel Dyer, James Reynolds, John Sweet, Sr., John Andrews, Henry Tibbitts, Samuel White, William Downing, Henry Greene, John Pratt, John Briggs, John Greene, George Beard, William Holmes, Daniel Greene, George Williner, Robert Tredcott, Robert Spink, Samuel Pratt, Lodowick Hodille and Richard Hodille. The freemen chose James Reynolds constable, and Thomas Gould, conservator, in joint commission with Richard Smith and Samuel Dyer engaged by the court. The inhabitants chose Thomas Gould, Lieutenant, and John Briggs, clerk.

TOPICS OF THE REVOLUTION.

Quidnessett had its share of this class of people, some from love of gain, some from lack of faith in the ability of the American colonies to triumph over the British Crown, and others from cowardice or timidity. Some of these Tories went off with the British, and others were driven out of the neighborhood while the enemy had possession of Newport and the waters of the bay. Among the vessels was a sloop, who joined the British. His estate was confiscated, but owing to his wife being left with the care of twelve children, the estate was afterwards given to her to assist in their support. After the war he was allowed to return and help his wife in caring for the children. He lived to the age of ninety years.

George Wightman, who joined the British, was in the battle of Portsmouth, Rhode Island. Thomas Wightman remained and inherited the estate of his father. (R. I. Chronicle, February 7, 1783, and Wightman's "Newtown.")

All the members of the American Alliance were ordered to give notice of their joining the British.

Some of the Tories played a double game by running their farm products to the shore during the night, and signaling with a dark lantern for their customers to call ashore for the goods. Benjamin Tanner at one time loaded his cart with butter, eggs, pork and salt meat. He succeeded in slipping of it at the Gulf Pasture point on the Gould's Point farm but was a little belated. He put his son, Palmer Tanner, then a lad of fourteen or sixteen years, on the old horse's back to guide him, while he took a pitchfork and pricked his steed until he went on all fours. Palmer used to tell this story to amuse the boys many years after its occurrence.

ARMY HEADQUARTERS.

At the time the British were in the harbor of Boston, an armed force of four hundred men was encamped on the hill a little west of the house of Capt. ^{Gault} Green. Troops were quartered in the houses of Thomas Williston, Jonathan Allen, and another, in the neighborhood of Massachusetts.

When the enemy showed signs of landing, all the forces hastened to be sent to repel them. There are indications of the encampment in three or four places on that hill, and some of the older inhabitants can remember the tall old oaks that once stood on that same hill, which shaded the troops in summer and shielded them from the winter's blasts.

His sons remained on the Island until the Revolution, when their love of liberty and independence excluded them from British patronage. They refused to trade with the British agents, although offered great inducements. This incensed them so much that Wallace sent an armed force and burned every house.

barn and haystack on the Island. This daring movement so impoverished the Allens that they were obliged to sell their estates and seek homes on the main-land.

December 13, 1687 William Allen was fined 6 s. 8 d. for refusing to take oath as grand jurymen. [Genealogical Dictionary of Rhode Island, p. 2.]

JOHN ALLEN was the first Allen who came to Quiddnessett. He came over from Providence Island in 1702 and bought (probably of John Green and son, who owned a large tract in that region) 128 acres of land, paying $933 1/3 for the same. The first block house was built on the east side of Allen's Rocks, which rise to a nearly perpendicular height of twenty or thirty feet for a distance of about thirty rods. The second house was built a little way from the first, down a declivity, and was enclosed with a stone wall six feet high, the area being about one and one-half acres. The house was in from the road some eighty rods or more. They built at these points because they were sheltered from the bleak, cold winds from the west, north and northeast. The land around was very stony. From the quantity of shells found in that lot, it was evident that they feasted liberally on shellfish.

which were found in and about Quiddnessett harbor in great abundance. On the east side of the lot is a shallow well of excellent water that quenched their thirst and supplied the house for culinary purposes. From the highest point of this rock is one of the most charming views found on the shores of the Bay. It overlooks most of the expanse of water from Newport to Warwick Neck, taking in the towns of Fall River, Massachusetts, Bristol, Warren and East Greenwich, while in the foreground may be seen the islands of Patience, Prudence, Hope and Despair. The rock is about a mile from the harbor, and from three to five miles from the islands.

After a saw mill was erected some two or three miles away, a large hip-roof mansion was built on this estate. Six generations were born in this house, and, after surviving the storms of 170 years, it was torn down in 1881, to give place to a one and one-half story cottage. The farm was deeded by John Allen to his son John who became sole heir to the homestead farm of 120 acres, the deed of which was given January 13, 1733, with a marsh of five acres. John ^{jr} left a daughter, Margaret, who married Christopher Allen. [D.D., 17] The place has always been owned by some of their descendants. A little more than sixtyfive acres of the east part of the farm was sold to Jonathan Allen, or his son Caleb. 52 acres of the farm next to the road was conveyed to his son, Thomas in 1718.

1747. April 17. Will proved. Executor, wife Sarah.
 To wife all indoor movables, and negroes Simon and Dinah.
 To three sons, Thomas, William, and Jonathan, wearing apparel.
 To four daughters, Phebe Slocum, Elizabeth Fairbanks, Bathsheba Johnson, and Mercy Card, certain money legacies.
 To son Jonathan, my great bible, &c. and two acres of land.
 To four daughters, the household goods at wife's death.

THOMAS HILL, went to Farmington--not to Rehoboth as has been supposed--taking with him his wife Elizabeth Allen. He bought of Benja Price of Farmington or Swansea in the county of Bristol in Massachusetts Bay, twenty acres of land for one hundred and sixty pounds, the deed being passed July 31, 1719. After a short period of perhaps five or seven years, his wife sickened and died leaving no heir. At a date we cannot fix he became enamored of Rebecca, his wife's sister and proposed marriage, but the laws of Massachusetts prohibited a man marrying his wife's sister. His overtures were persistent and he decided to take his goods and chattels with the object of his affections and cross over the line to the land of Roger Williams, where the people were more accomodating and liberal. They settled on a tract of land in the northern part of Quiddnessett in South Kingstown. Here they spent their halcyon days and here they ploughed and planted, reaped and harvested their grain. Their children were also born and reared on this farm. ~~That John Thomas Hill and Rebecca Allen were married has never been ascertained, but as~~
 was the custom in those days to go before a magistrate and have the ceremony solemnized they called on Benoni Hall, a Justice of North Kingstown, and he performed the rites, ~~which~~ ~~must have occurred at the time his father sold his farm~~ in 1728.

Walter Crumpleve, who settled in Warwick about 1665, bought the next lot west of John Gould and it was bounded on the east by Gould, on the north by the Potowomut River and the Reynolds brook that flows into it, and on the south by a highway. Crumpleve bought the place with others concerned in the quidnessett speculation and about the same time Major Humphrey Atherton & Company purchased the whole territory of the Indian sachem Coquinesquod, June 11, 1659. Crumpleve died soon after this purchase was made, and his wife petitioned the General Court for permission to sell the estate, which was granted, and she sold it to Joseph Fayol about 1686, and he sold it to Jonathan Hill, August 24, 1713. When the dam was constructed on the Potowomut we have no means of finding out, but it was not until after the first bridge was built in 1715. Jonathan Hill died in 1731, and it was not built in his day, for there is no evidence that he ever lived on the land he had owned. His son Thomas Hill had lived on the land three years when he saw the necessity of a saw-mill, a fulling-mill, and a grist-mill. He and his neighbor, Greene (probably the Quaker preacher), formed a company and carried on these several industries together for some time. After a while Hill had two or three sons born to him and Greene five or six, and it was found convenient to work these boys in when approaching low-tide. The plan of work was that Hill should run the mill one week and Greene the next. The boys, true to nature were very roguish. Greene's boys, when it was Hill's turn to run the mill, gagged the wheels with nails, sticks, and old boards, so that it would require half of Hill's week to clear the wheels of debris and repair the damage. All this time Hill was losing his share of the profits and Greene was taking it. Very soon a feud between the parties grew up and the mills being on Greene's side of the river, Hill was obliged to sell his interest to Greene, and an acre of land went with the mill to secure water power.

Jonathan Hill gave by deed to his son, Thomas, one-half of an open sloop boat, named the May Queen of fourteen tons burthen, December 31, 1788. This boat was used in the trade of the company until they dissolved partnership. Soon after the Greens built a sloop for themselves of seventeen tons burthen and named it the Two Brothers. She carried on trade between the mills, and Newport and Providence until 1827, when Judge Richard W. Greene built a sloop of twenty tons burthen named the Emily Ann, which was sold a few years later.

The saw-mill and fulling-mill were abandoned after the company dissolved and the Anchor works superseded them. Afterward a mill for grinding grain was established.

The first house built on Hill's land was located on the hill about twenty rods above the bridge, and the second was built on the rising ground in the rear of the Indian mound by the side of the forge mill pond. This mound (known as the "Round Hill"), is perhaps fifteen rods long and half as wide and nearly forty feet high. The top is level and underlaid with shells. There are several large oak trees on the top and sides of it. It sets on the east bank of the river just at the upper place of tide water, as it was in 1728 when Thomas Hill first settled there, and just before the dam was built.

Just by this mound at its base was the landing place of the Indian canoe. When the dam was built it was the end of navigation of all crafts. Near by was the place where the natives set up their wigwags when they dressed their shell-fish and venison. And here is the place where they danced and sang their famous war whoop. The broken shells on this place indicate a residence of many years.

By the side of this place Thomas Hill selected the resting place of his family and many of them reside there.

His third wife refused to marry him unless he would sell off a part of his farm to discharge his indebtedness, and he sold to Jabez Reynolds about 50 acres on the west side of the farm, extending to Reynolds brook. A large part of this land was bought back in 1864 by Syria W. Matthews.

HILL Genealogy

* The Genealogy of the Hills has long been a question of doubt and uncertainty. It is more than thirty years since the first paper was put into my hands for the purpose of record. Search was made in the Colonial Records and the name occurs early but once, and John Hill was found as captain of a military company in the town of Portsmouth in the Revolutionary War. The name occurs in Worcester soon after the settlement of that town and one in the northern part of the state. 19.6.4., Allen Genealogy, page 173.]

The following Hill data is included in this volume to preserve it for the benefit of future searchers interested in the family.

1. JONATHAN HILL,¹ died before 1690; married MARY _____.
Resided at Warwick, Portsmouth (Prudence Island), Rhode Island.

JONATHAN HILL came to this country and settled on Prudence Island in Narragansett Bay, about 1657 or a little before. William Allen came from Wales in 1655 and settled on the Island three years later. The two families were probably intimate friends or neighbors before they left Wales, and one family settled the other. Jonathan Hill either married before coming to this country or upon his arrival. His wife was named Mary, but nothing further is known of her. The Hills and Allens lived on Prudence Island and acquired large estates, until the war of the Revolution, when with many others they were stripped of their live stock and everything else of value. Every house, barn and haystack was burned by order of Captain Wallace, a British officer in command of the Fleet in Narragansett Bay, Sir Peter Parker being Lord Admiral. The Hills and Allens were obliged to leave their homes on the Island for less costly homes on the mainland.

JONATHAN ALLEN was ordained a deacon of the "Old-Principle Baptist church in 1780. The house in which he was accustomed to worship was near Scoblestown, in the westerly part of the town. This church is the oldest in North Kingstown. Roger Williams was its first preacher, and in 1658, Elder Thomas Bager was ordained and settled there in 1664. Jonathan Allen was an industrious, prudent and devoted man. He built his home where Nathaniel Allen's now stands.

MANSFIELD ALLEN when first he was about twentyone years of age joined the "Wightman gang", a notable company organized by George Wightman of Quiddnessett. Some time before the war he held a commission as Colonel, and afterward, while in the British service he was made Lieutenant Colonel. Their headquarters were on the island of Rhode Island, under British protection. From their place of rendezvous they sallied forth at night and plundered the adjacent farms along the shores of both sides of the bay. Mansfield was well enough acquainted with the country to conduct an armed force for prisoners and plunder. John Allen, having seen and heard so much of Mansfield's boldness and villainy, often said "If I could catch him in North Kingstown, I would shoot him as quickly as I would shoot a black snake." He was suspected of being inimical to the State and was taken before the Committee of war at East Greenwich, and confined in jail. This occurred late in the year 1777 or 1778. He joined the British and never returned unless in secret. It was said that after the war he visited Jabez Reynolds, however true that might be it was evident that "he left his country for his country's good."

He was very frugal and has related how, in buying his farm, the first four-penny-half-penny he ever possessed helped to pay for it. His farm embraced the Indian Fort on the Eastern line.

He was Lieutenant in the home service one year afterward, and guarded the shore nights while the British had control of the Bay.

His father bought for him, of George Fowler, a farm of twenty-nine acres on which he lived all his days. The house was of the "olden type". The stone chimney formerly was twelve feet back and about four feet high. A child of about ten or twelve years of age could just stand under the mantel that held the front part of the chimney.

HON. JOHN ALLEN was born at the homestead of his father on the west bank of Allen's harbor in North Kingstown. His advantages for education were as good as the common schools of his day afforded. There was but one schoolhouse in the town and that happened to be about a half mile from his home. It proved to be the stepping stone to his future usefulness. He showed nothing remarkable in early life.

On May 27, 1769, four months after his first marriage, he bought the Robert Westcott farm of eighty acres, now owned by Joseph Madison. Judge Allen lived on this farm when he was taken prisoner by the British.

Nothing will develop a man's character earlier in life and more assuredly than war. John Allen was a ^{young} ~~young~~ man but was never a military man. He had made known his mind and determination early in the Revolution. He was determined to support the cause of Liberty and Independence at the sacrifice of life and fortune. He was not a speech-making man, but had great influence with his neighbors who stood about two Patriots to one Tory. He had spent most of his life in Quidnessett, but in 1776 when the British invaded Newport and had control of all the lower part of Narragansett Bay, he was obliged to leave his farm in the hands of some other person.

He had been accustomed to boating stones from Hope Island to Newport, and it was quite convenient for him to take supplies from Quidnessett to the American army at Siver-ton, with his sloop Seaflower, and his craft being in danger of seizure so near to Sir Peter Parker's gun ships, he moved his family and boat into Greenwich but continued his vocation. In the spring of 1779 he returned to his farm. The British were so disquieted that they resolved to capture him, and also William Spencer, Christopher Hall, Oliver Spink and C. Tillinghast. Spencer had been placed upon the Nicholas Spink farm while the owner was confined in Scituate, ten or twelve miles from the seashore where his farm was situated, for communicating with the British and running supplies to them at night.

A large number of Tories from Quidnessett and other parts of North Kingstown, had joined the British under the guidance of Col. George Wightman (the title was given him at the close of the French and Indian War). The business of this gang was to plunder the farms on the seashore. They pillaged and burned five houses and barns in one night in North Kingstown, two houses being in Quiddnessett.

A breach of confidence occurred here between John Allen and a Tory cousin, Mansfield Allen. While John was living in East Greenwich, Mansfield was thrust into jail for being inimical to the United States. Out of sympathy for his young relative, John sent him food from his own table on several occasions. Mansfield, after making suitable concessions to the Council of War, which met at Greenwich, was released. Very soon thereafter he came in contact with the "Nightmen Gang" and determined to turn traitor to his country. He applied to John Allen for the use of his sloop to convey provisions to the British, then lying a short distance off Hope Island. He was told he could not have it for such a purpose, but if he would take his trade to his own countrymen he would be welcome to the use of it. This incensed the man and he resolved to retaliate. Accordingly he brought the British from their ships under cover of the darkness, to take John Allen and William Spencer, with their cattle and family supplies, to Newport. Everything Spencer had was taken and he and his cattle forced to the shore, a quarter of a mile from his house, where three barges were awaiting their arrival. One of the boats was grounded by the ebb of the tide so that it could not be got off. It fell into the hands of the Patriots and the first man that boarded it was William Parks.

Elated with his success, Mansfield conducted the British to the house of John Allen, a quarter of a mile in another direction. A mulatto boy, belonging to John Allen's father, who had been on the shore as guard, met the British at the door, at the same time warning the family of the approach of the enemy. The doors of the house were crashed in with the butts of their guns. John Allen was rudely taken out and hurried to the shore with his clothes and shoes on his arm, and was not allowed to complete his toilet until he was snugly on board one of their boats. Four bayonets were placed at his back and he was ordered to run. So stubborn was he that he declared he would not run one step and they might kill him as quickly as they pleased. His wife and four small children were driven out of the house with no other apparel than their night clothes. The oldest girl, nine years of age, begged the soldiers to throw their clothes out of a window, but they were denied so much comfort and a bed quilt was thrown out instead. The wife casting an eye upon some silver spoons as she made for the door, thrust them into her bosom and these were the only relic left them of a once happy home. The house was set on fire as soon as the family were out and burned to the ground with all its contents. The family escaped to the house of Christopher Allen nearly a mile off, the nearest hospitable retreat. * [Add note on p 332]

John Allen's stock was taken and driven part way to the shore, but the minute men obliged the raiders to leave them and hasten to their boats. A few shots were exchanged but the Patriots were afraid of hitting the captives instead of the captors. The Kentish Guards under Col. Joseph Fry were just too late to effect anything. A cannonade from the garrison began as soon as the people had gathered sufficiently to warrant a shot, but no one was injured. Several shots, exploded bombshells, and now and then a chain shot have been ploughed out on the farms in range of John Allen's house. Joseph and William Flood, twelve and fourteen years old, respectively, at the time, each tugged home a cannon ball on their return from the shore after the fire.

During John Allen's passage to Newport the marines annoyed him very much by picking at the silver buckles on his shoes. He asked an officer if that was the treatment a prisoner was to receive from his Majesty's officers. After that he was better treated. He was incarcerated nearly five months in a loathsome prison with about forty other prisoners, black as well as white, mostly in one room, some of whom were chained to the floor above and below, in filth and a most sickening stench. The capture occurred at about 4:00 A. M., June 8, 1779, and they were released October 25, 1779, when the British evacuated Newport.

John Allen was released about a month earlier at the earnest solicitation of a young lady friend who was attending a ball at Newport where Gen. Prescott was a guest. Her beauty and ladylike deportment won the eye and attention of the British general when she sought the first opportunity to broach the subject of Mr. Allen's imprisonment. She made her appeal so eloquently that he was set at liberty the next morning.

The imprisonment of John Allen made him many friends; while the Tories of Quiddessett quivered with rage when they discovered the bearing it had upon their cowardly complicity in the matter.

The principal persons connected with his capture were George Wightman, James Austin, William Cory, Jabez Reynolds, Benjamin Tanner, Nathan Allen, Mansfield Allen, Nicholas Spink, and several others who escaped the vigilance of the sheriff's posse. With the exception of Benjamin Tanner these persons were arrested and held in Scituate and Coventry for several months. Jabez Reynolds and Nathan Allen were accompanied by their wives under sentence.

Oliver Spink was captured in Quiddessett, taken to Newport and imprisoned, where he took smallpox and died. He was the father of Oliver Spink of Wickford.

Charles Tillinghast, an enlisting officer in North Kingstown, was captured at the same time. He was taken to Newport where he was exposed to smallpox, but by vaccinating himself he saved his life. This disease was much more malignant at the time of the Revolutionary War than it is at present. He was grandfather of Ex-Senator Charles Tillinghast James, late of Providence.

John Allen was an enlisting officer about the same time.

An attempt was made to capture Christopher Hall of Lower Quiddessett, but he was on the lookout and escaped with his family and some soldiers who were on guard in that vicinity. His home was burnt and twelve spring calves were driven by the British to Quansett Point and taken aboard their vessel. After the war, Hall was obliged to sell his farm and it was bought by Samuel Spink, father of the Hon. Joseph Spink.

The Quiddessett shores were closely guarded day and night to keep the enemy from landing to trade with the Tories and to plunder from the patriotic citizens. The Tories received exorbitant prices for their produce and live stock, while the Patriots had theirs stolen or forced from them.

At one time while the British had control of the Bay four hundred men were encamped on the hill, a little above the house on the Gould farm in Quiddessett. Capt. Josiah Gibbs was ordered to this station with his company to relieve the minute men. Capt. Gibbs no doubt had command of the companies of Quiddessett. They were on guard night and day from Potowomut River to Wickford Harbor. A part of the time a company was kept at Quansett Point, but was ordered to Wickford. We believe it was commanded by Capt. Richard Updike. The hill on the Gould farm commanded a fine view of the bay and overlooked the whole of Pogeack Point. It is believed the British never attempted to venture north of this point towards East Greenwich. [Colonial Records, Vol. 7, p. 452.]

It seems there was a station in Quiddnessett and Capt. Gibb's company was ordered to it. Pojack Point was about a mile from that station and it was in view of Potowomut and the river by West Pass.

Troops were quartered in several houses in Quiddnessett, the house on the Governor Greene Farm lying on the Bay, the Wightman farm (confiscated to the State), Jonathan Allen's, William Cory's, Christopher Allen's, and perhaps some others.

The General Assembly voted money and clothing to the prisoners at Newport under a flag of truce conducted by Col. Dyer from North Kingstown. No names were mentioned but it was understood the benefits were for John Allen and William Spencer. [Colonial Records, Vol. 8, p. 244.]

At the time of his capture John Allen was one of the commissaries of the town.

The next spring, March 25, 1780, John Allen formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Thomas Gould, and they occupied the two farms, viz., the Joint farm and the Gould farm. They continued their connection twentytwo years, ending in 1802 when his son, Thomas Gould Allen, took charge of the farms and so continued until the death of his uncle in November, 1836.

His generous nature and practical good sense brought him into favor and note among his neighbors and fellow

* Note

Should a question arise as to the veracity of the above statements, we would refer to the depositions taken under oath from Joseph and William Allen, Samuel Franklin, George Hunt, Abigail Aylesworth, Patience Wightman, and Catherine Spurr. The depositions were taken by Judge Covell of Providence, on proof of a petition to Congress, gotten up by the law of Judge Allen, to recover damages for the loss he sustained by the burning of his house and furniture, and the damage to his farm, to say nothing of his torture and sufferings while in prison. The petition was sent to Congress by Senator James while he was in the United States, and he neglected to attend to it, and it was either lost or left in the archives of the Senate.

Judge Allen took an appraisement taken of his house, and went to Congress, praying for indemnity, but for some defect therein it was lost.

William Spencer employed John Allen and Oliver Cook, to estimate his loss, but as Allen's was lost he did not present his claim until 1854, when his son was sent to Congress by Senator James, and that was neglected. His losses were estimated at about $25,000.

citizens. From the war of the Revolution to the year 1810 he was almost always in the public employ, either in the courts or the General Assembly. In 1784-5 and 6 he represented his native town in the Lower House of the Assembly, and in 1791 was elected one of the Senators under the old Charter. That year he was elected one of the Justices of the Inferior Court of Common Pleas for the county of Washington, and was re-elected two or three times in succession. [Colonial Records, Vol. 10, p. 428.]

In March, 1801 he was elected 4th Senator again. That same year he was elected 2d Justice of the old "Supreme Judicial Court" and was successively re-elected until 1808, when he retired from the Bench. During all that time Peleg Arnold was Chief Justice.

In 1809 and 1810 he was again elected representative to the General Assembly, and so highly was he respected that he held his full share of offices in the town as well as the State.

His political bias was strongly Democratic. Thomas Jefferson's sentiments were thoroughly instilled into him from the beginning, and during Jefferson's and Madison's administrations he gave them his voice and influence as he did both the Fenners while he occupied the gubernatorial chair of the State. For twenty years, embracing the period from 1790 to 1811 he made himself thoroughly acquainted with the workings of both governments, the National as well as the local.

Judge Allen came to his death from an attack of a furious bull. The animal was brought from Hope Island that day, or the day before, and was turned into the pasture west of the house, in which was a pair of oxen which he commenced to fight. The Judge went out to separate them, when the bull turned upon him, butted him down and trampled upon him until his spine was broken and he was internally injured. Seeing his helpless condition he called for assistance, but it was too late to save him. He lived but thirty-six hours after. He died in peace--much respected and much lamented. A very large concourse of people from all parts of the state gathered at his residence by boat, carriage and on foot, to show their love and respect for a good man and a christian citizen.

The Providence Gazette and Country Journal (John Carter edition), thus speaks of him, August 7, 1813:

"At North Kingstown, deservedly respected, John Allen, Esq., in the 66th year of his age. This virtuous, respected and highly useful member of society was deprived of life by being butted and trampled on by a bull."

A lengthy and interesting obituary was published in the same paper, written, we suppose, by the Hon. John Whipple, of Providence, who was one of his most intimate friends. It reads as follows:

"To preserve the integrity of conduct and consistency of principle amid public conversions, when force and tyranny sets right at defiance, to adhere to what is just and honorable, is the character of a great and good man; that character belonged to John Allen.

When our glorious Revolution burst forth in 1776, Mr. Allen became its patron and supporter. No dangers could appall him, no bribe corrupt him, no allurement could detach him from supporting the cause of his injured and bleeding country. In the same struggle, Mr. Allen was taken away by the enemy, and during his rigorous captivity his house and furniture were laid in ashes, and his farm stripped of all his stock; but his Republican soul scorned to veild to threats, or even to the scorpion cruelties of ruthless enemy.

His fellow citizens appreciating his distinguished virtues and his excellent understanding, correct judgment, appointed him successively to the various important offices of Legislature and Judge of the Supreme and Judicial Court, offices which he accepted with modest diffidence, and executed the trust with distinguished ability.

In early life he chose the 'one thing needful' and became an exemplary member of the Methodist church. As he lived, so he died-- a Christian. His mien inspired respect and on his countenance was imprinted the soft smile of benignity, the emanation of a warm, benevolent and generous heart. In public life he was known for his incorruptible integrity, suavity of manners, and for strict adherence to social and benevolent virtues. As a husband, an affectionate parent, a sincere friend, he had no superior and seldom an equal.

The community by his death has lost an admirable citizen, a liberal supporter of literature, and one of her brightest ornaments as a gentleman and as a Christian."

BENJAMIN ALLEN, III, D., was one of Rhode Island's best learned men. At the age of fifteen years he ran away from home to seek an education. His cousin, Judge John Allen, meeting him very early in the morning, persuaded him to return with him to his father, and he would plead for his father's assistance. He was found lenient, and the aid so much coveted was immediately given. With the father's help and his own untiring perseverance as a teacher, he graduated with high honors in the year 1797, at Brown University, and was a tutor in that institution for one year, after which he was chosen principal of the Plainfield Academy in Connecticut. A few years later he was a professor in a college in Pennsylvania, and afterward in a college in New York state. For several years he kept a classical school for boys and young men at Hyde Park on the banks of the Hudson River.

REV. JOSEPH WINTON ALLEN'S first religious impressions were received while reading the Scriptures at the age of eight years. In the spring of 1814 he attended Methodist meetings in his neighborhood, and joined a class organized a short time before. In the spring of 1816 he united with the Six-Principle Baptist Church, subsequently was ordained deacon of that church and was licensed to preach. He continued in it a faithful servant for about five years, when he withdrew and on May 20, 1820, joined the First Baptist Church of North Kingstown, under Rev. William Northup, and was ordained to the work of ministry at the same time.

His field of labor at first was at school-houses and private dwellings, afterwards in meeting-houses at the villages remote from his home. Though young and with but a limited education, his services were owned and blessed of God in the salvation of many souls. His circuit comprised Groomton, the "Tin Top Meeting-house", Phenix, Vatick, Apponaug, Greenwich and Richmond.

June 1, 1822, his disciples and others were set off and organized into a church called the Union Branch of the Baptist Church, and, with the exception of about three years, he continued its faithful shepherd until 1838, when he was obliged to retire on account of ill health.

Elder Allen, as he was early called was emphatically a self-made man. He was independent; he sought not to please; but to win; his sermons were plain and practical, often pointed, and his people were made the better for them.

An educated minister, at the time he made his debut as a preacher of the gospel, was looked upon with many suspicions by the country people. For the want of education he applied himself diligently to the study of the Scriptures and such theological books as would aid him in his work of saving souls. That was his mission. That he was successful, hundreds within his locality will testify, and not a few in the Judgment will rise up and call him blessed.

He was never dependent on his people for his sustenance, but like Paul, ministered to his necessities with his own hands. Though the laborer is said to be worthy of his hire, his labor of love and toil was seldom, if ever, requited, perhaps from choice. He was a public benefactor. He sought to make the people better and they listened to his voice.

Quidnessett, if not North Kingstown, is better, more enlightened, and more religious for his kindly ministrations. Through his efforts a small meeting-house for his people was built in Quidnessett, and afterward a much more convenient one on the plains between Wickford and Greenwich.

As a man and a citizen he was genial in his habits, and his sociability won for him the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

Given below is the history of Methodism as presented by Rev. Joseph W. Allen, who was the original Methodist preacher in Quidnessett.

"Notice was given that there would be a religious meeting at the residence of Burford Davis, in Wrentham. My mother went. Elisha Sweet, who had recently commenced preaching, was at the meeting. At the close of the meeting, mother invited him to preach at her house on a week day afternoon. At the appointed time he came, and preached from John, 9th chapter, 7th verse, "Do wash in the pool of Siloam". Some twenty or thirty persons were present. Mr. Sweet was invited to preach in the school house, that stood near the road, at the west end of Judge Allen's farm. There was quite a gathering. Things looked hopeful. The Baptists began to wake up, desiring to know what this new doctrine was,

"Jesus Christ and his crucifixion" as the central point. In the course of time there were hopeful conversions. A class was formed consisting of John Allen, Mary Allen, Elizabeth Allen, Anna Bevington, Caleb Allen, Amy Hill, Theodore Bevington, John Spink and wife. Subsequently Thomas C. Allen and wife, Samuel Barton, Elizabeth Tenet, Amy Tenent, Amy Tourjee, Job Tanner, Robert Cary and Daniel Dawley.

"The labors of the Methodist ministry under God was a great blessing to the neighborhood.

"Quarterly meetings were held at the homes of John Allen, John Spink, George Allen, and sometimes at the school house.

"The circuit preaching was visited Quincesett and Wickford during John Allen's life were Pliur Britt, Theophile Smith, A. Stebbins, Elisha Streetter, Warren Barnister and Daniel Wentworth. For several years the circuit consisted of Centerville, East Greenwich, Quincesett and Wickford. The preachers visited one of these places every month and often held meetings at some farm house between these places."

Their names were: John Hall, Christopher Spink, Thomas Allen, John Wightman, Christopher Spencer, Thomas Gould Allen, William Reynolds, Samuel Austin, Ezra Davis, Elisha Sweet, Franklin Green. "They were considered God send". Not one of them was born with greater promise than Thomas Allen. When his father died in 1794, he was but a little more than sixteen years of age, just old enough to don the habiliments of the young man. His grandfather died just before, and his great-grandfather just after he was born. He had no other advisor than a kind hearted mother to direct his steps. As soon as he arrived at the age of twentyone he came into possession of one of the best farms in Quiddnessett or North Kingstown. It had a fine view of Quiddnessett Harbor and Narragansett Bay. He met with several reverses that reduced his fortune. Then he went into trade at Albany, N. Y., but with no better success. His freight boat was called the Albany.

 and scattered. In 1840 he went to New Orleans where he spent the winter. The next spring he went to Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1851 he made a visit to California. Returned and took his family to Muscatine, Iowa and settled there.

In 1862 a civil war being inevitable, he raised a volunteer company and was appointed Captain. Soon a regiment was called for and he was appointed Colonel. After a year in service he was put in command of a brigade, acting as Brigadier-General. While leading his command in the battle of Hillboro Pike, near Nashville, Tennessee, he was shot from his horse and instantly killed. His second son, Fred, was killed by his side at the battle of Yellow Bayou seven months before.

Col. Hill was a generous, intrepid man. When duty called he was ready to make any sacrifice for the right. Energy and a sound judgment made him a successful man. For the most part he was his own instructor. He had no fortune to lean upon; no foundation for a corner stone, other than such as is laid by warriors and statesmen of the Old and New world. The acts of his regiment are the stories of his history.

JEREMY GOULD¹, son of Richard Gould of Bovington, County Hertford, England, was born about 1581 at Bovington, England; died 1654 or 1655 at Devon England; married November 27, 1604 at Chesham, County Bucks, England, PRISCILLA GROVER, who died after 1655 at what is now Middletown, Rhode Island. She was the daughter of William Grover of Godmore. They resided at Newport, Rhode Island.

Children:

2. I. Mary; married William Jeffrey.
3. II. Susan; living in London, 1653.
4. III. Thomas, born about 1622 or 1623; married Elizabeth Coggeshall.
5. IV. Daniel, born about 1625; married Wait Coggeshall.
6. V. John, born about 1625 or 1626; married Margaret Hart.
7. VI. Henry, baptized July 12, 1631 at Aston Abbotts; probably died young.
8. VII. Daughter; married William Withington. Had son, Peleg.

JEREMY GOULD was assessed in 1623 for property in Halton and Weston Turville, County Bucks, England. In the registry of marriage he is called son of Richard Gould late of Bovingdon. January 24, 1631 he was witness to the will of Alice Luces of Wingrave, County Bucks, England.

He came to New England in 1637 and perhaps tarried for a short time with his brother Zaccheus at Weymouth, Mass. He was in Rhode Island as early as 1638. He was admitted a freeman at Newport, at the first town meeting ever held at Newport, May 20, 1638. "1638, Nov. 20. Was among those admitted as inhabitants at Newport after this date." On January 28, 1639 he was witness to will of Henry Russell, in which Zaccheus Gould was trustee; and in 1639 sold land in Weymouth to his brother Zaccheus. "1641, Mar. 16. Freeman".

Family tradition states that he went back to England and returned in 1642, bringing his wife and three children-- Daniel aet. 16, Thomas and John. He settled in the part of the island which is now Middletown, where some of his descendants still live.

In 1649 he was on a committee (composed of ^{five} ~~one~~ person from each town) appointed "to examine some votes brought into court."

He was elected to the Colonial Assembly several years while here.

His wife died later than 1655 and was buried in an orchard on the farm which he had given to his son John. Soon afterward he returned to England. He wrote to Job Lane June 6, 1654 that he intended to return to New England. In another letter he speaks of his son Simon then. (1653), living in London. [Gould Genealogy (1895), p. 19.]

There is no evidence that Jeremy Gould was ever a non-conformist or was ever in any way allied to any sect. There is no evidence even that he was a member of the Friends Society in Newport, up to the time he returned to England, about 1655, which sect by that time had become not only popular but numerous in the whole colony.

The English ancestors of Jeremy Gould for six generations are as follows: Richard⁶, Richard⁵, Richard⁴, Thomas³, Richard², Thomas¹ [See Gould Genealogy (1895), pp. 19, 20.] "Upway Manor", the place of his nativity, and the family coat of arms held as an heirloom so many years, all indicate high rank and intelligence; while for more than a hundred years this family married and inter-married with the most noted people in the colony of Rhode Island.

Second Generation

MARY GOULD², daughter of Jeremy Gould and Priscilla Grover, died after 1675; married about 1640 WILLIAM JEFFERAY (or JEFFREY), born, 1601; died January 2, 1675, son of William Jefferay and Audrey Harvey.

Children:

9. I. Mary Jefferay, born March 20, 1642.
10. II. Thomas Jefferay.
11. III. Susanna Jefferay.
12. IV. Priscilla Jefferay, born 1654.
13. V. Sarah Jefferay, born 1656.

THOMAS GOULD², son of Jeremy Gould and Priscilla Grover, was born 1622 or 1623; died August 20, 1693; married June, 1655 ELIZABETH COGGESHALL (divorcee of John Coggeshall), youngest daughter of William Baulstone (or Balston) of Newport and Elizabeth _____. No children.

THOMAS GOULD was probably admitted a freeman in 1645. He was corporal, 1644; elected to military offices in Newport in 1654. That same year he was chosen one of the six commissioners of that town to transact the affairs of the four towns that then comprised the colony. He held this office until 1660. Freeman, 1655. Mar. 28, 1657 he bought of Koshtosh, Indian sachem, the island called by the English "Gould Island". In 1661 he bought a farm of three hundred acres in Quiddnessett, in the Narragansett country (now North Kingstown). He doubtless built a log cabin and placed a man there to fence in his farm and take care of it generally. After a while a one-story house was erected and additions were made until it became one hundred feet long. Daniel Gould, Jr. raised his family there and so did Jeremiah, his son. An enclosure was built of barberry bushes on the east and south sides of the door yard two or three acres large. The seeds of the barberry were imported from England. The birds carried the seeds north and west until the bushes reached as far as the Connecticut River. At about the same time seed was brought from England and planted in Salem, Mass. They became so numerous in Middletown, Rhode Island, in 1766 that the General Assembly passed an act to have them destroyed. [Colonial Records of Rhode Island, Vol. 6, p. 509.]

When his residence was at Newport he was elected to the Colonial Assembly and after he settled in Wickfessett he was several times Assistant and Deputy for Kingstown; constable, Kings Town, 1870. June 20, 1870 he was sent as constable to seize any persons pretending to exercise jurisdiction in Narragansett on behalf of Connecticut. In 1876 he was elected commissioner of Wickford.

Soon after his settlement in the Narragansett country he was much harassed concerning the jurisdiction of his farm. The Rhode Island Colony claimed the territory from Panostuck River to the Narragansett Bay, and so did the Connecticut Colony. For seventy years (Professor Greene says) it was in dispute. Thomas Gould and Henry Tibbitts possessed farms on the Narragansett Bay, and Henry Reynolds on the upper Potowomut River. They were confounded to mark the jurisdic-diction to which they belonged. They conformed generally to Rhode Island as a matter of preference. Thomas Gould, having lived at Newport would of course cling to the colony he had learned to love. Tibbitts and Reynolds would write with Gould because he was a strong man and a man of influence.

The General Court was adjourned from "Pattaguanoscut" to Thomas Gould's house in Aquidnessett, May 19, 1671. Benedict Arnold was Governor, but the court was held by John Clarke, the Deputy Governor. There were six Assistants, the Secretary of State, the Attorney General and the General Sergeant. At this court May 20, 1671, Thomas Gould was chosen Conservator of the Peace and Lieutenant of a military company. The object of this court was to engage the people to stand by the colony of Rhode Island by a solemn oath and to assure the people that it was not the purpose of the court to deprive them of their just estates.

May 20, 1673 he sold to John Cranston of Newport, for £20, Gould Island, half now and the other half at death.

May 12, 1674 he sold to John Cranston the whole of Gould Island for full satisfaction.

May 2, 1677 Thomas Gould and others petitioned Assembly for instruction, assistance and advice as to oppressions they suffer under from the Colony of Connecticut. He and others were arrested in that year and taken to Hartford and imprisoned. Their release was demanded and the prisoners were released.

by promising to adhere to Connecticut. Planting time compelled them to make that compromise.

June 19, 1678. Thomas Gould was again appointed Conservator of the Peace.

July 29, 1679. Thomas Gould and fortyone others of Narragansett petitioned the King, praying that he "would put an end to these differences about the government thereof, which hath been so fatal to the prosperities of the place, animosities still arising in people's minds as they stand affected to this or that government."

Newport had become a place of note and trade early in its settlement. It increased rapidly in population and wealth. Thomas Gould and his nephew Daniel, carried on a lucrative business between Quiddnessett and Newport for many years. They raised sheep, cattle and horses, besides corn, oats and wheat.

December 6, 1689 he made an agreement with his nephew, Daniel Gould, by which the latter was to pay to Thomas Gould's wife, Elizabeth, $10 a year for life, in lieu of all her claims of land in Narragansett.

1690. Deputy.

1697, September 13. The widow being desirous of being with her children, her husband's nephew, Daniel Gould, engages to pay her $10 a year for life, as agreed with his uncle Thomas, who he says had died on or the 20th of August.

DANIEL GOULD², son of Jeremy Gould and Priscilla Grover, was born in 1628 at Newport, Rhode Island; died March 26, 1718 aged 80 yrs. at Newport, R. I.; married December 18, 1651 at Newport, WAIT COGGERSHALL, born September 11, 1638, died July 9, 1718, daughter of John Coggeshall and Mary.

Children, born at Newport:

DANIEL GOULD settled on a farm which his father gave him in Middletown. This farm is still held by his descendants. He was commissioner in 1886.

The exact time when he made known his Christian faith is not known. Mary Fisher and Ann Austin were the first Friends that came to this country. They arrived at Boston from England in 1658. They were imprisoned five weeks and sent back to England. He joined the Quakers, embracing their views among the earliest of those who united with that sect in 1659. William Coddington, Mary Dyer and Daniel Gould were the three persons who organized the Friends society in Newport. In a pamphlet of his, relating to sufferings of Marmaduke Stevenson and William Robinson in Boston (they belonging to the same sect as Daniel Gould) he mentions that after coming from Salem to Charlestown Ferry "these meet us a constable and a rude company of people with him, and takes us all up (about ten in number, besides the two banished Friends) and after much scoffing and mocking examinations, all of us were led to prison, and God doth know, who is a just rewarder of all, how harmless, peaceable and innocent we came into the town, behaving ourselves in much fear and humility of mind, yet notwithstanding, being Quakers, to prison we must go, where we remained some days." Being criticised as a "Dumb Devil" when he refused to be led into speech, and they saying he was simple and ignorant, beguiled and led by others more subtle, he answered: "If you think I am simply bewitched and not willfully in error how have you showed kindness to me or where has your love appeared to help me out of the ignorance and delusion you suppose I have fallen into?" "Do you think your prison whip and base usage are the way to do it? Is that the way to begin with to rebuke any man for the error of his ways?" Then someone cried out that 'he is more knave than fool'. Then I answered again and said if I hold my tongue I am a Dutch Devil a fool and ignorant; if I speak I am a knave. After this Richard Bellingham the Deputy Governor, being full of envy, said to me: 'Well, could you shall be severely whipped', which was afterwards done with thirty stripes upon my naked back, being tied to the carriage of a great ox. And this is my comfort to this day, and I bless the Lord for it that my sufferings were in great abundance. I have been five whipped at the same time, two men and three women, the men having fifteen stripes each and the women ten. After we were whipped we were all tied to prison, where our lodgings were with our sore backs upon the boards, where we remained until after the execution."

In the 8th month, 1669, the quarterly meetings of Newport sent him to Maryland for the first time. He sometimes rode on horseback, stopping to hold meetings among friends afternoons and evenings on his way. In his Journal he gives an account of his first voyage to Maryland. He says: "It pleased the Lord to make me find good favor and my travels and labour were very successful wherever I went, and my return home was in the end of 1699." May, 1671 he went on his second voyage to Maryland. On this trip he had John Burnegas for his traveling companion and often spoke of his "good, comfortable times". Sometimes he had Friends on the way to accompany him. Several times he went to Maryland, Philadelphia and as far south as Virginia.

He was Deputy, 1672-3; Assistant, 1673-4-5-; He was taxed 32 lbs. 9d., 1686. April 1, 1685, arrived in Newport on return from fifth voyage, which included travel in Maryland, New Jersey, Delaware and Pennsylvania, the distance aggregating 1987 miles. November 1, 1687 he started on his sixth voyage to Maryland. His last journey was made in 1693, by that time the people called Quakers had become quite numerous. The doctrine Daniel Gouge disseminated in his journeys took root and grew. Societies were formed and meeting houses wherever there were people and a convenient locality. October 1, 1693 he was returning from his last trip and dated his letter at Narragansett: "I went over the water in a canoe with Old Place to Sachonnet, and lodged that night at 'Yonah's Cowry's". He ceased his journeying at 70, but did not close his ministry until a much later date. His faith was strong and unwavering. The night he died he said to Elder John Collins who was with him, "Oh, John, what I have been professing is the truth."

Margaret Gould Mitchell, the Gould Historian, gives an interesting account of this audacious man taken from the minutes of his death on the Records of the Friends of Rhode Island Monthly Meeting, page 56. It reads as follows:

"Daniel Gould, aged ninety years, departed this life at his own house, in Newport, Rhode Island, on the twenty-sixth of the ninth month, 1716, and was buried in the Friends' burying ground near the meeting house in Newport. He bore a faithful testimony for the truth he possessed, both in suffering many stripes in Boston and with frequent testimonies in public, and finished this life with the assurance of Life Eternal which he signified on his death bed and encouraged all to believe and walk in the same truth."

JOHN GOULD, ²son of Jeremiah Gould and Priscilla Grover, died after 1680; married MARGARET HALE, elder of Edward. She died after 1671. No children.

When he was old enough his father settled him on a farm about four miles from Newport, in what is now called Middletown. His mind seems to have run to public employment and he was several times elected to offices in the colony as well as Newport. He was admitted as Merchant, Nov. 17, 1653; Commissioner 1655, 1657,

1661, 1662; Deputy 1664, 1665, 1670, 1672, 1673.

May 13, 1667 he was on a committee to make a rate law of $150 for defence of the place against the common enemy and for supplying defects in armour, stock and powder, and mounting of great guns.

April 20, 1671. He received a letter of this date from Eschdales, signed your cousin (i. e. nephew) Peter Witherington. On May 14, 1672, he with the Governor, Deputy Governor and Walter Clarke were appointed to draw up instructions for the Rhode Island Commissioners who were to meet a committee from Connecticut.

December 2, 1674. He and his brother Daniel were appointed overseers of their brother-in-law William Jeffrey's will.

Some time about 1682 or 1683 he bought a tract of land containing about one hundred and sixty acres, bounded on the south by a highway, on the east by land of Henry Reynolds, on the north by the Potowomut River and on the east by land of Thomas Smith. In a few years he deeded the piece to his brother Daniel, who in turn deeded it to his son James; James deeded it to his nephew Jeremiah, who afterwards deeded it to his son Daniel.

John could doubtless find out his line well situated in years, and was joined of the family Burwin, found in Middle-town. The family account states that, having no children of his own, he gave his estate to his nephew John Burwin.

JEREMIAH COULD inherited his inheritance of his father in Middessett by will. There is a tradition in the family that Daniel Could stole a horse from Greenwich to his home and his two sons overtook him on horseback. Daniel offered to take his father on behind, but Jeremiah disapproved and offered his father his horse. This was accepted. When they discovered which son loved and respected his father, killed all his sons in Greenwich. Being a free man, the Middessett Colony were killed to Jeremiah.

Being a member of Daniel Could, the Mother preacher of Vermont, his love and veneration for that society were very great. He was one of the members who built the Friends meeting house near Paine's Mill in East Greenwich, in 1730, and was for eighteen years clerk of the monthly and quarterly meetings. The records are plainly written. His membership was never put in doubt. He was a member of the society. He was obliged to give up the office in 1730 on account of

Final Health.

He was a diligent overseer, and in the year 1710, was chosen Deputy for Kingstown, 1716, 1718, 1720, 1721, North King's Hill, 1727, 1728, 1730, 1732, 1733; Clerk of the House, 1731; Assistant, June, 1727, 1715, 1724, 1726, 1728, 1729, 1736, 1739, 1740; Secretary, 1727. He was selected a Justice of the Inferior Court of Common Pleas for the County of Middlesex (the present) County for 12 years.

He lived in great peace and harmony in his old age with his neighbors. He died highly respected by the people of the Colony, and much lamented. He was buried in the Court Church. His grave was buried beside his.

The will of Beveridge could not be written because of 12 years before his death. The first day of July, 1740 he called a council. His inventory was taken the 12th of the same month.

After his death was given to his wife, Elizabeth, one-half of his real estate as long as she remained his widow, but if she should marry in she was to have thirty pounds per annum, in lieu of her dower. She was to have the slave, Rachel, inventoried at seventy pounds, also the household goods, one-half of the household furniture, and the best milking beast.

He gave to his son Daniel, the other half of his real estate, and after his mother's death all her dower to go to him, his heirs and assigns forever, and the best and best.

this treaty: versus of 15 three his birth in August, 1717. His father died two years after and he was old enough to administer on his father's estate as executor to his will with his mother.

THOMAS COULD was not brought to the school before, but passed his time in fishing, fowling and horse-racing. He was proud of his riding, especially in the open fields. He was of red hair, stature, broad face, broad, flat nose and blue eyes. He was five or six years younger than his brother and lived until he was about 70 years, then he went out to Philadelphia to complete his education. After he received his degree he spent his father's money in the West Indies and elsewhere. He was finally brought home by the ship which brought him to the college and was the richest in the town.

The house on the west side, now known as 1001 after the first Thomas Child's purchase of land, was built in two sections at different times. In 1760 it had been so constructed that it was interchangeable with the first house, now known as 1002. The House Committee, in 1760, but the stone chimney was not built until 1761. The house was ordered by the first Thomas Child to be built in two sections, the first section was built in 1760 and the second in 1761. For the benefit of those who have a partial interest in the history of these houses, the name of the first section is as they occurred and they in fact, in 1741, sold the farm to Thomas Gould.

Thomas Gould's grandfather held one-half of the two farms from 1741 to 1771, when his daughter's widow passed to the aid of her life in 1790. After the death of her husband, she was succeeded by John Fay, her second husband, who conducted the affairs of the estate until Captain Greene took charge in 1747. The Mount Airy, consisting of three hundred and twenty-five acres, was nearly all under cultivation, the upper farm of five hundred acres was heavily wooded with large timber.

Rebecca Sibbitt rented the lower farm from 1747 to 1750.

John Kimford rented from 1752 to 1755, and the lease was extended to 1757.

Richard Cornell rented from 1757 to 1759, at six hundred pounds per annum.

John Fay leased the farms from 1759 to 1762 at nine hundred pounds per annum. His lease was extended to 1764. He then leased both farms from 1764 to 1766.

In 1766 Thomas Gould became of age, but did not enter the army until 1771, when he entered into company with his stepfather and continued until 1773, when the company was ordered to Captain Matthew Manchester and Benjamin Finkle, son-in-law of Captain Benjamin Greene.

In 1775 Matthew Manchester built the barn as per bills, of a coat of four hundred pounds. In 1778 he was ordered to sell produce to the British, being off to York Harbor.

 In 1780 he had to leave the island, and went away in debt £3000.00, offering silver and his balance in depreciated continental money. The British were ordered to count it as a witness. In 1784 he was committed to the Inferior Court of Common Pleas of Washington County and the verdict was against him. He appealed to the Supreme Judicial Court and the judgment was again against him. Then he petitioned the General Assembly for a writ of Habeas Corpus and it was granted.
 He lost his case for the third time. He lost out money in the hands of one of the Judges of the Court (Judge Potter of Coventry), who placed it in the hands of the Colonial Treasurer, where it remained three or four years. The execution was served and he went to jail at South Kingstown, where he was kept nearly four years, when he died. His wife died one or two years before his death. His son went to Captain Greene and begged him to allow his father to attend his wife's funeral, he being responsible for the debt for four or five days, but Greene refused to comply. When Manchester had his some time notified that they could have the body funerial by paying the debt and interest. The law he had to comply. Before Captain Manchester's confinement in jail he was elected to the General Assembly four or five several times. In 1773 when he went upon the Council Chair to 1790.

he bought for his sons three acres and paid for them. Nine of his daughters were married in the old home on this farm to Benjamin Pennington, of Fairfax, and Benjamin, and not one of them lived with him more than three years before death removed them.

By 1775 was the best capital. The wool and the loom were the staples to be converted into linen and woollen fabrics for summer and winter wear. From every house had its wheel and loom and the operation of making them. From Ann's daughter, a daughter of these important families, they were made. The first step to learn them, they visited the loom, and the fabrics were in the hands of the people for making stock. Calves, lambs, colts and pigs were raised in great numbers. Horses, cows, sheep, hogs, loom, wheel and loom were the principal articles of the rich and fertile soil. The first step to make them was in abundance on these farms. Two hundred and fifty sheep, forty to sixty head of milk cattle, twelve hogs, and fifteen to twenty hogs at the fall slaughter were the usual number of stock of these farms usually. Thirty to forty acres of corn, yielding from one thousand to eight hundred bushels a year was usual on these farms.

The workmen on these farms were partly hired and partly family help. The workmen were paid by the day. The fall months were from April to May. The workmen were paid by the day.

the wrong he was doing himself. He was not a devout man, he neglected the weighty matters that make the Christian. Nevertheless it was a very intelligent man, very ingenious and witty in communicating his thoughts. It was very interesting to listen to the long stories that fell from his lips. Some of his neighbors were in the habit of calling on him to listen to the long narratives of what he had seen and experienced in the times of the French and Indian war, and the war of the Revolution, though he did not figure much in the former, and but very little in the latter. He was a patriot and loved his country, but he loved ease and comfort too much to engage in the strife of bloody war. He was in the army three months, but a little before the battle of Portsmouth, his term of enlistment expired and he deserted that defect. Many of his neighbors rewarded him for their services, but he declined a petition as he was too proud to ask favors of the government for so short a service.

We cannot pass by the "Old Ground" so well known for its sake without a notice of its popularity. Judging from the ponds of water on the shore in two or three places the Indians must have resorted hither in great numbers and out but selfish to carry to their distant wigwags. Some of these ponds cover an acre or more and are several feet deep. From the summit of the Mount there are three or four ponds in a row. Very soon after the white man settled the quarry they resorted to fill the hole. The hole was so shallow and plentiful on the slopes of the quarry at noon, known as Allen's quarry for more than a hundred years. The deep of water that gave rise to the name "Gould's font" was north-east and south-west nearly a quarter of a mile in length by an eighth of a mile broad, and its height, sixty or seventy feet from water level.
